HAPPY HEELS

“Dear Jeanne, are there heels out there that you can actually walk more than a block in?”—Melanie, Calgary

I may be a freak of nature, but let me assure you, I have walked countless city blocks all over the world, some of them even cobblestoned, in extremely high heels—and I’ve lived to tell about it. Not all my jaunts were comfortable, but in my line of work, looking glamorous is an inconvenient obligation and foot discomfort an occupational hazard.

Now before I get podiatrists jumping down my throat, let me say that I am not advocating the wearing of high heels for everyone. Many people are simply not able to indulge in such footwear. Doctors will tell you that heels over two inches high are bad for you, and could lead to foot problems later in life. That said, we fashionistas live to luxuriate in our ivory towers, and we’re adamant about residing there in killer heels, at least part of the time. Happily, I’ve found shoes that won’t paralyze with pain, and should allow you to walk at least a block and a half.

A thicker heel provides more stability, helping distribute the weight more evenly. Platform soles are a godsend—they act as a kind of cushion. Wedge heels, of course, are always more comfortable. Shoe comfort has to do with a well designed last—the wood or plastic form that the shoe is built around. Canada’s own Ron White, who’s becoming very popular south of the border, offers many types of high-heeled shoes in his eclectic line that are actually comfortable to walk in. He even has a range that he’s dubbed “All Day Heels.” And while some of these babies might be a little much for the novice, those of us who’ve been around the fashion block swear by them. Toronto designer Abel Munoz has also made it his mission to deliver high-heeled shoes that are both comfortable and sexy.

Of course, walking in heels is an art in itself: these shoes can throw your posture off, so keep your shoulders relaxed, chin level with the floor, chest up and tummy flat. Then again, let’s be real: some of these shoes aren’t meant to get anyone much further than down the length of a catwalk, and sometimes models can’t even accomplish that. Still, heels can make us feel awfully sexy and strangely empowered.

While some cheap heels have indeed proved to be comfy, I find that a well-designed shoe, which inevitably costs more, is usually more comfortable. Try to go for as much inside padding as possible. The soles of our feet lose volume as we age, and extra cushioning, especially for the balls of our feet, is welcome. Foot-care companies like Dr. Scholl’s and Tana also make great gel insoles that can help prevent some of the aches and pains. Foot shape is always a big factor. Some suggest going for round toes instead of pointy. However, I find pointy toes tend to work better with my narrow feet and long toes. When it comes to particular brands, everyone will have something different to say, depending on their personal foot type. For me, Gianvito Rossi makes a relatively comfortable high heel, and I’ve spent long stretches of time in his gorgeous shoes and boots. Others nod to Manolo Blahnik, Sergio Rossi and even Nicholas Kirkwood, though I’ve yet to find a pair of those glam shoes that I can tolerate.

You owe it to yourself to experiment with different sorts of heels. But if you’re one of those people who insists on comfort at all times, heels may not be for you. There’s an element of slight discomfort in high fashion sometimes, and unless you’re willing to bite the bullet a bit, stick with stylish flats. Few things are as unfashionable as a face that shows signs of torment. If you refuse to suck it up, your discomfort could chip away at your confidence, and that could make you look decidedly unchic. As the old adage goes, if you can’t stand the heat, get out of the kitchen.” Either that, or just demand to be driven everywhere.—Jeanne

GLAMAZON GLOW

BY DEBORAH FULSANG

A sun-kissed look is a surefire way to boost your mood. Inspiration-wise, few do glow as well as Victoria’s Secret—of course those svelte Victoria’s Secret Angel bodies show off a faux tan to optimum effect. The brand’s make-a-body-beautiful cred motivated our trial of their new Beach Sexy Bronzing Shimmer Powder and Tinted Self-Tan Body Spray. For instant gilding worthy of the lingerie catwalk, try the Tinted Body Lotion with Shimmer for instant results, too. You’ll look just-back-from-vacation refreshed. From $14, victoriasecret.com

THE STATEMENT TROUSER

This season, the trouser is getting its turn in the spotlight. Regardless of your age, this timeless piece will instantly add a modern update to your wardrobe. Ranging from bright shades to fearless bold prints for the adventurous—there's bound to be one look to help you make your style statement BY VANESSA TAYLOR

BRIGHT SIDE

The ultimate day-to-night option, this tailored trouser has a clean silhouette (with no side pockets to add bulk) and ankle-length crop that is more stylish than a mid-calf capri. By sticking to one colour, even a bold one, the result is streamlined and age-appropriate.

YOU SHOULD

CERI MARSH

LEARN TO GIVE A TOAST

Your best friend is getting married. She's picked a great guy you don't mind sharing her with and you don't hate the bridesmaid's dress she's chosen for you. So, getting up and saying a few words about the lovely couple should be a breeze, right?

Well, yes, if you call sweat stains on your satin, dizziness and nausea breezy, then sure.

Fear of public speaking is frequently ranked by North Americans as their number-one phobia. Worse than spiders? Worse than running into an ex at the grocery store on laundry day?

OK, people. With wedding season nearly upon us, it's likely that many of us will be asked to get up in front of our loved ones and give a short speech. You can be a part of making the event a memorable one, or you can be part of the "Can you believe it?" post-mortem at the next day's brunch. Well, I suppose that makes it memorable, too. But really, you should learn to give a toast.

When I asked some friends to recall bad toasts, I heard some doozies including descriptions of the groom's porn collection, threats from fathers of the bride and sad predictions for the couple's future sex life. I think we can all go ahead and guess how many of these anecdotes involve an open bar. Of course the stories are funny to hear about but you can only imagine the mortification and disappointment of the couple getting married.

Louise Denny, the famously elegant VP at Random House Canada and executive publisher of The Knopf Canada, is well known for her way with a speech.

She recommends remembering who your toast is about—the guest of honour, not you—if you're feeling anxious.

Not that it stops even her from getting jitters. "I'm always nervous every time I speak publicly. You're doing it for someone else and I'm nervous that I won't do them justice. I speak slowly to get over my nerves. My friends know that the more slowly I'm speaking the more nervous I am. But you owe it to the person you're toasting and the listeners to be as articulate as you can."

Oh, yes, the others! You might be thinking about your friend the bride, when you sit down to write your speech and that's all very well, but the toast will also be heard by a room full of guests. Denny says, "It's not a personal toast to one person across a table, you're involving everyone."

Alison McGill, editor-in-chief at Wedding Bells magazine, thinks you can't forget the alcohol factor. "Limit the tippie. Don't use liquid courage, it doesn't work."

You may think a drink will help you relax, but it may also make you forget your notes. Which you must make in advance. No matter how close you are with the person you're toasting—never wing it.

If you're giving a toast at a wedding, it's most likely because you've been asked to by the bride or groom, which means they trust you. Don't let them down: take the job seriously and prepare in advance.

"I love a mix of humour and heart warming," says McGill. But above all, be brief. "Five minutes is the maximum. It's longer than you think."

LINDA EVANGELISTA FOR CHANEL

Chanel's new Summer 2012 eyewear campaign features supermodel Linda Evangelista and was shot by head honcho Karl Lagerfeld himself. Evangelista's classic glamour and killer cheekbones set off the strong shapes of the collection's sexy frames. The sunnies have a swinging '60s vibe with bold, primary colours and retro rounded shapes, while the optical range is a little more refined in tortoiseshell with contrasting coloured tips and matching logo.

JESSIE J. WIGS OUT

British pop star Jessie J. is known for her bold style and often wild hairstyles. Her secret? Wigs. She has said that she doesn't have time to glue in extensions and that her hair is damaged enough as it is. "I don't want my hair falling out so I wear wigs," she told Glamour magazine.

OIL RICHES

Get a gorgeous glow with the help of multitasking, nutrient-rich face oils

For years oil had a bad rap when it came to skincare, but the right oils can do wonders. They help dry skin hang onto moisture, balance problem complexions, soothe and protect sensitive skin, reduce the appearance of lines and generally bestow you with a healthy glow. Time to reconsider.

TOP INGREDIENTS

Patyka Huile Absolue Face & Body Serum boosts skin circulation, brightness, hydration and tone with St. John's Wort, vegetable squalane, wheat germ oil and antioxidant-packed rose hip and red mandarin oils. $74, Murale

MORE BALANCE

Combo/oily skin can make friends with oil, too. Clarins Lotus Face Treatment Oil balances problem skin with rosemary, chamomile, geranium and lotus extract. $50, clarins.ca

FOR A GOOD CAUSE

Model Citizen Josie Maran Argan Oil is one of three featuring labels by Maran, Petra Nemcova or Angela Lindvall; 10% of proceeds go to the model-artist's charity of choice. $58 each, Sephora

BIG BRIGHTENER

Decléor Aromessence White Brightening Concentrate helps fade hyperpigmentation and restore clarity with vitamin C plus antioxidant-rich peony, saxifrage and tamarisk flower. $83, The Bay

ALMOND BOOST

Almond oil nourishes sensitive skin with antioxidants including vitamins A and E. Weleda Almond Soothing Facial Oil also has plum kernel oil and blackthorn flower extract. $28, weleda.ca

NIGHT NUTRIENTS

Peptides work with argan, rose, sunflower, geranium and carrot seed oils as well as brown seaweed in Dermalogica Age Smart Overnight Repair Serum, which is designed to firm, brighten and protect skin—and target age related skin dryness. $88, dermalogica.ca

this week's TOP TRENDS

WHITE JEANS

Finding a great fit in crisp white denim is tricky. Choose straight or bootcut for a curvy figure: "The key is finding a style with a side seam that comes slightly to the front of the leg," says Eric Wazana, president of Second Denim. "This gives the illusion of a longer, leaner silhouette."

Second Denim cotton-Lycra high-rise bootcut jeans, $110, secondclothing.com

MATCH SET

M.A.C Cosmetics takes the fledgling matchy-matchy trend global with its new Fashion Sets, featuring lipstick and lipglass and nail lacquer in literally the world's favourite—and cult-favourite—seven shades. For instance, Spice was a best-seller in more than 20 countries, including Canada; and Girl About Town: it was a huge hit with the fuchsia-lip crowd (you know who you are).

DESCRIBE YOUR STYLE
"Classic, intelligent, refined and understated."

You may have seen Catherine Dean before. The independent curator and landscape architecture student has graced the pages of almost every best-dressed list that matters in Toronto.

Dean, originally from Montreal, enjoys the finer points of life and design. With her background in art history, the aesthete has worked as a magazine photo editor for 10 years, most recently at Toronto Life.

But, her day job wasn't enough to satisfy her busy mind and art-y eye, so Dean found work as an independent curator when she could find the time. "The art world has the added bonus of providing lots of style inspiration," she says of her moonlighting.

Behind the source of Dean's expert fashion sense is an eagle eye trained to notice the details. She zeroes in on those subtleties most people overlook, but that truly tip the balance in establishing an ensemble as simply OK and trend-relevant to one that's fabulous and trend-setting.

Dean's appetite for design continues: she recently returned to school and is completing her Masters in landscape architecture at University of Toronto. No doubt it won't be long before we'll be seeing her stylistic statements, en plein air!
